Details Not Available

No official declaration was forth-coming as to what decision was reached by the conferees, but it was authoritatively ascertained after the meeting that all those participating were agreeable to the proposed re-duction of annuities. The official exwere agreeable to the proposed reduction of annuities. The official explanation of the gathering was forthcoming from Mr. Stimson in a brief communiqué to the affect that the President had conferred with the Congressional leaders so as to acquaint them with the progress of the reparations conference in Paris.
The details of the discussed revision were not made available, but it is authoritatively stated that the proposed calls for a 10 per cent scaling down of American claims against Germany. It was further learned that while the annual sum paid the United States would be decreased one-tenth, that a compensatory increase in the interest on the debt from 3½ to 5 or 5½ per cent would actually bring the collections to approximately the amount that the United States now claims from Germany.

In the administrative county of London there are now 141 authorities, with a membership of more than 5000 men and women. With the Outer London districts, which, together with the county makes up Greater London, there are a further 300 au-thorities. It is estimated that the number of persons helping to administer this area, entirely apart from permanent officials of the civil service, is about 10,000. A remarkable fact, which visitors from overseas find especially amazing, is that, with the exception of a few chairmen and mayors, all of these people are unpaid and contribute their services wholly because of their sense of civic duty and responsibility to their communities.

It takes about £56,000,000 a year to run London, of which roughly £12,000,000 for poor relief, £5,000,000 for poor relief, £5,000,000 for police, and then an extraordinary long list of other expenses running down to trivial amounts. These au-thorities supervise a wide list of activities, of which the provision of housing and the care of the open spaces are examples. At the end of 1927 the Government and the London authorities had built 75,288 tene-ments, providing housing for more than 500,000 persons, while the open spaces which must be cared for exceed 48 square miles in area.

The topics for discussion fall into the three following groups: research in agriculture and forest development and improvements in methods and practices; agricultural economics, such as credits, transportation methods and annual temporates are plant and annual tion, markets, etc.; plant and animal pests, quarantine and regulatory problems.

One of the most interesting sub-jects to come before the conference is the introduction of new crops, in which the United States has been very successful during the last 25 years, while little progress has been made in other American countries.

The project of establishing a central Pan-American exchange for the distribution of seeds and plants will be taken up.

in Field of State Government

The needs for new state buildings during the next 10 years has also been provided for, a complete program having been adopted which takes consideration of population i crease in all institutions of the State.

The administration has codified the school laws, and the purchasing bureau of the State functioned during the last blennium at a purchasing cost of .67 of 1 per cent, and a crime commission, appointed by Governor Young, has recommended a department of penology, which is expected to co-ordinate criminal procedure throughout the State.

Succession of Achievements Convict camps have been enlarged so as to accommodate 1000 men, and wages for certain prisoners have been established in penitentiaries. A system of state parks has been begun; every possible assistance has been given Boulder Dam legislation; an education commission has be-appointed to centralize school a ministration and to make it more efficient and economical, and many governmental bodies, such as the in dustrial accident commission, which former administrations had neg lected, have been revived and re-stored. Other achievements include refinancing of the Sacramento and San Joaquin reclamation project and the institution of old age pensions. What is probably most pleasing of all to Governor Young, however, is that with all this activity and expansion, he has made and carried into effect the first budget in the history of California which included ever state expenditure, and at the sam time has not drawn upon the $20 000,000 surplus of the state treasury temporary relief, according to Eugene S. Taylor, manager of the Chicago Plan Commission. As a city planner, he says the fundamental need for traffic is to get as much street space as will be used.

Improvements planned by the commission recognize five divisions of permanent traffic relief. These five divisions consist of designating through traffic streets, building major through traffic streets, spanning river and railroads with bridges and viaduets, designing a quadrangle of wide streets around the down-town district, and the projection of superhighways to the suburbs.

At Intervals of a mile apart all over town, north and south and east and west, streets have been designated as through streets, Mr. Taylor said. They have been specially marked, paved and lighted, and are protected from side streets by "stop signs," in order to give speedy passage to passenger automobile traffic.

Then on section lines major streets are being broken through. These are long thoroughfares that are being widened for all classes of traffic, including street cars, trucks and heavy buses. Examples of these are West-ern Avenue and Ashland Avenue.

Bridges supplying the missing links between the outlying neighborhoods and the heart of the city have played an important part in "unkinking" traffic. The doubled decked Michigan Avenue link has been the outstanding example. However, it is now groaning under such a load of traffic that plans are being rushed for another and more pretentious bridge over the Chicago River near the Lake Michigan shore, which will keep through traffic out of the downtown crush. Other recently completed bridge improvements are those at La Salle Street, Monroe Street and the Franklin-Orleans Bridge new streets are to be built as a result of the river straightening south of the Loop. This will open new traffic arteries through what has been a railgoad yard, which made a bottle neck of the city for south side traffic.

The quadrangle of down-town streets, Michigan Avenue on the east, Canal Street on the west, Roosevelt Road on the south, and Wacker Drive on the north, is planned to divert through traffic around the congested down-town district. It will also enable the Loop to expand horizontally as well as vertically.

The day began rather badly for the Americans when Mme. Lafaurie defeated Miss Cross, 6—3, 9—7, thus giving the French a lead of 3 matches to 1 in the two-day series. The great battle between Miss Wills and Mme. Mathieu followed and for more than half an hour the crowd was thrilled by a display of sparkling tennis. Miss Wills was well on her game and Mme. Mathieu was playing much better than she ever has played in her career. Then followed another long duel between Miss Marjorie A. Morrill of Dedham, Mass., and Mme. Kleinadel, who has a good steady style with her tennis racquet. For a full hour the tail American and the petite French woman kept ranging the ball back at one another with little to choose between them. Finally Miss Morrill who had won the first steep of the second, 3—6, pulled out the final set. 7—5 for another American victory. In the third set, Mme. Kleinadel was once within two points of victory, but the American railled and finally won the first three matches from the touring team May 18.

Yankee Pitching Recovers

Those who think that the Yankee pitching has collapsed completely must be reminded that Pipgras held Boston to one hit, Saturday, Pennock pitched his first good game of the season the same day, the first game of a double-header, and Helmach allowed only two hits Sunday in five hinnings. The Yankee pitching, like its hitting, moves in sycles, but with the season progressing, it is becoming more stable. Hoyt, Pipgras, Pennock, Johnson and Heimach will give many an exhibition of fine pitching before the season is over and with the pennant-winning aspirations.

New York's record in the West was seven victories and four defeats but their illustrious rivals, the Philadelphia Athletics, did even worse with could be a subject to fans. Albetics, did even worse with what they will do against the Hantons as they did is no easy task. But what they will do against the Pankees this week, is of chief interest to fans. Always capable in the crustal series and particularly so against the Athletics last year, the Yankees may regain the Jeadership in their Philadelphia series this week, it is connel Mack's chance, however, to show fans that the tables have been turned at last—that the Athletics of 1929 have the courage and persistency which they lacked in 1928 in team matches with the champions. 1929 have the courage and persistency which they lacked in 1928 in team matches with the champions.

The general consensus is that the champions are not up to their 1929 standard of play. That is true, for they were 4½ games out in front of second place at this time a year ago. A team such as the Yankees is the erratic type.

Motorless Flying

A bright sunny day, a mile off the Atlantic coast, the sea smooth and a fair wind blowing. Seated in the stern of a small sailboat you go slipping along with only the lapping of the water against the sides to break your reverie. This is pleasure indeed. You can talk about motorboats but to the real sailing enthusiast the playing of the winds and the smooth silent traveling of sailing cannot be equaied.

It is a bit of a game, too. The wind shifts, there is the tacking, the quick-twisting of the rudder and the swinging of the boom to watch for. It is real sport.

We have come to think of flying with the same and the same and the same are same as the s with its roaring-motors as akin to with its rearing motors as akin to racing car driving or racing motor-boats. That it, too, offers quiet, rest-ful traveling with all the sport of handling the varying winds is not generally recognized. Yet one type of flying offers exactly that with the added zest that by skillful juggling you can laugh at the law of gravity for some length of time before it gets you and makes you glide down onto, a field in a gentle swoop.

This new for the general public art of thing is called gliding and

Bringing Wembley to the Microphone"

N OLD adage as to there being A more than one way to do a thing is ably shown in a recent British experiment. Incidentally, it offers a possible suggestion for circumventing anti-radio promoters of public enterprises generally. Unable to come to a satisfactory arrangement with the Football Asso-ciation, the British Broadcasting ciation, the British Broadcasting Company a short time ago announced that there would be no radiocast of the Cup Final this year in which the Bolton Wanderers beat Ports-mouth by 2 goals to 0 at Wembly Stadium. However listeners-in in all parts of the country expressed their disappointment so freely that the British Broadcasting Company was stimulated into devising an ingenious plan for bringing "not the micro-phone to Wembly, but Wembly to the microphone," as one of their an-nouncers expressed it. At intervals of 15 minutes observ-

At intervals of 15 minutes observers elbowed their way out of the great crowd of 93,000 people that filled the Stadium, and hurried to a transmitting station a few hundred yards from the ground, where they radiocast throughout the length and breadth of the land an account of that portion of the play which they had just seen. In the intervals that occurred between the ending of each short narration and the arrival of the next observer, Jack Payne and the B. B. C. orchestra played dance the B. B. ## MASSACHUSETTS STEPS INTO LINE ON HOOVER PLAN

Public Employment Offices and Fact-Finding Board Vital Cogs in Wheel

The need for an engineered pros-perity grows clearer if labor and capital are to be satisfactorily em-ployed. Herbert Hoover has pledged his Administration to put such a new system of economics into practice.

An authorized exposition of a portion of his general plan for sta-bilizing prosperity was presented to the Conference of Governors at New Orleans by Ralph O. Brews-ter, former Governor of Maine, who explained that the economic foundations of this policy and see foundations of this policy, and spe-cific ways of applying it, are de-tailed in "The Road to Plenty," by William True Road to Plenty," by William Trufant Foster, director of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, and Waddill Catchings, New York banker.

By WILLIAM T. FOSTER and WADDILL CATCHINGS

Massachusetts plans to spend this year approximately $19,000,000 for new roads and the repair of old ones. The proposed amount is about twice as large as the total capital expenditures, out of state funds, which have been approved by the Governor in recent years.

To what extent will it be feasible to allocate these expenditures with reference to fluctuations in business activity? In other words, how far is activity? In other words, how far is the Commonwealth prepared, at the present time, to co-operate with the Federal Government in its plans for preventing unemployment? The State is fortunate, first of all,

The State is fortunate, first of all, in having better economic indexes for the purpose than most of the states. The Commission on the Necessaries of Life keeps an index of the cost of living; and such an index is indispensable for carrying out the program which Mr. Hoover recommends

Furthermore, the Department of Labor and Industries maintains em-ployment offices in Boston, Worcester and Springfield, and it has agencies in a dozen other places. It also collects monthly statistics, and reports monthly indexes, of the number of persons employed by industrial establishments. The latest of these reports covers over 653,000 wage-

System Good But Inadequate This information about wage earn-ers, however, covers chiefly workers in the building trades and in manufacturing establishments. Similar statistics are needed for other groups, including public utilities and retail trade. It is also necessary to obtain statistics with regard to the unemployed. Without such data it is not possible to deal with this problem in a satisfactory way. No sooner had President Hoover, through Governor Brewster of Maine, expressed the hope that the states would aid the Federal Government in preventing unemployment and sustaining prosperity through judi-cious planning of public works, than two bills were introduced to the General Court on petition of Representative Henry L. Kincaid.

One of these bills authorizes cities and towns to borrow and appropriate money for reserve funds, for the purpose of carrying on public works in times of business depres-

The other bill provides for the establishment, by the Commonwealth, of a "reserve fund for public works, to be expended at any time by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, for the public of the council of the c purpose of undertaking and cattle ing on public works to provide employment for citizens of the Comployment in times of business de-cher states, and because, as we have just stade, the available indexes of business conditions though excellent as far as they go, are not adequate. Still, much could have been done toward preventing unemployment, as is clear even from the statistics which actually were available.

From October to November of 1927 employment in manufacturing establishments fell off more than in any corresponding period, with the exception of 1920. In November, 1927, employment in manufacturing establishments fell off more than in any corresponding period, with the exception of 1920. In November, 1927, employment was 7.5 per cent below employment was 7.5 per cent below employment in the previous November. Under the policy we have proposed, such a decline in employment as for immediate investigation and preparation for probable action.

Now, as it turned out, employment is sump was the largest since records have been kept, with the exception of the major depression of 1920.

These statistics are significant when we realize that of every thousand men in manufacturing concerns in the Commonwealth who were able to support their families out of wages in October, 44 were unable to do so in December.

Now, if the policy we have proposed to the product of the policy we have proposed to the product of t

New York Art Notes

By RALPH FLINT

YEW YORK'S art season of 1928-29 has reached its retro-spective stage. The dealers are bringing out tempting groups of mis-cellaneous art to lure the traveler in their midst, and the educational powers in the art world are assembling the banner work of the year as proof that sound training in the fine arts is just as essential now as it ever was.

The New York School of Fine and Applied Art, otherwise known as the Parsons School, is a lively center of artistic intuition that continues to produce results little short of astounding, owing chiefly to the application of the Hambidge system of dynamic symmetry to their various branches of tuition. Let those who are prone to scoff at the introduction of any such tenets into tance puts this sculptor in a class rarely reached today.

Frederic Harrison's son, Bernard designs at least one bookplate, while the curricula of the art schools withhold censure until they have seen for themselves what excellent things his obvious long background of sound drawing before commencing with oils.

section of bookplates was prominent one that is bound to have far reaching results. According to the Triadic color theory of John M. Goodwin of Washington, D. C., a system of whirl-ing color wheels are employed to study the relations of complementary colors and to seek out various ways of building up a fresh and stimulating color harmonics. The results, seen in a series of advertising posters, are sufficiently delightful to warrant any amount of investigation into this fascinating and little ex-plored field of art tuition, and it may be condently expected that the Parsons School will rise to meet this op-portunity with the vigor and en-thusiasm that characterizes the thusiasm that characterizes the work of this ambitious and farsighted institution. As usual the various departments As usual the various departments of instruction, have fine-work to show, much of it regulation, perforce, but invariably invested with surprisingly fresh qualities of handling and exhibiting individual points of view. Costume design, stage design, period decoration, interior decoration, museum research, industrial posters, window decoration, etc., etc., all acquire an extra, un-collection of some 30 oils, water colors, and etchings, among them one rarely seen of a girl in a boat at night on placid waters.

The splendor of Zorn was well supplemented by the quiet refinement of Prince Eugene's landscapes, "Le vieux château" and "Le fragments of sky above restful fields are problems in painting which the Prince obviously enjoys solving. Seascapes and snowscapes were plentiful, among which those by Gustaf Fjaestad and Anna Boberg were plentiful, among which those by Gustaf Fjaestad and Anna Boberg were possibly the most typical of the love of these northerners for their white and blue-green shadows, Among the most radical of the modof A. Kojertinsky, a first-year pupil all-over diapered patterns being gay

Another art school in the end-of-the-season session is George Luks' painting class, to be seen at the Anderson Galleries, with a fine burst of vigorously managed canvases very much in the general mood of the teacher but not quite so slavishly contrived as in other years. Mr. Luks is obviously a stimulating influence in the classroom.

The Montross Gallery offers an in-teresting ensemble of canvases and nouncing a forthcoming series of volumes, "American Etchers," each volume to be devoted to an individwater colors by contemporary painters, although the temporary paint-of this gallery. Also a fine display of new potteries by Varnum Poor is to be enjoyed. At the Ainslie Galleries a large group of canvases by Jerome Blum is on exhibition. Many of these color-ful visions of southern France and the tropics were on view at the Anderson Galleries earlier in the season, but they are worth showing again for their individualistic handling and vibrant hearth of the season, but they are worth showing again for their individualistic handling and vibrant hearth of the season, but they are worth showing again for their individualistic handling and vibrant hearth of the season o dling and vibrant harmonics. Also attractive water-color studies of picturesque corners of Europe by Frances I. Bennett are to be seen at these galleries. Knoedler & Co. are displaying specially fine group of Durer prints at their galleries during the month, the seventh and last print show of this season at this house. All the well-known plates are here and they late date, Dürer's mastery of engraving being too obvious a fact and his intricate, harmonious blending of figure and background too wellknown for even the most casual gallery-goer to need instructional no-tice. It is interesting, however, to observe the vigor that Dürer was able to bring to his etched work after his long handling of the engraved line. In "The Vernicle Held by One Angle" and in the "Christ on the Mount of Olives," Dürer struck a livelier stride, a more dramatic handling of light and shade that makes these plates specially appeal-

Who: HANS MEMLING.

Where: Belgium When: Fifteenth century

Why famous: A Flemish painter of Bruges, to whom one contemporary writer referred as "the greatest painter in Christendom." No au-thentic records throw light upon his birth or education, even his identity being almost engulfed in the many confused renderings of his name The two commonest forms are Mem-ling and Memlinc, both of which are found in Bruges today. Some have be lieved the artist came from Mayence on the Rhine, served his apprenticeship there or at Cologne, then went into Flanders to work under his mas-ter, Van der Weyden, whom he so soon and so vastly excelled. It appears certain that he was a citizen of Bruges by 1475.

While that version may be the most plausible, it is far from the most fascinating account of the painter's early life. For there is a story, though unfounded, that Memling contrived soon and so vastly excelled. It ap unfounded, that Memling contrived to escape from the battle field of Nancy and made his way across the winter fields to Bruges. Ar-rived there wounded and weary, he st. John's Hospital who restored him.

In the end, having no means to repay his benefactors, Memling painted them a picture, or perhaps more than one. And those pictures have re-mained always in their quaint, medie-val surroundings. Though the work of Memling, the "Raphael of Flemish art," may be studied in many of the great galleries of the Old World and the New, the place par excellence for establishing an acquaintance with it is at Bruges There is treasured that exquisit shrine of St. Ursula, considered Mem-ling's masterpiece. The same quali ties of luminous color, of dignity and nobility, and of delicate beauty of form and expression are evidences on a larger scale in the famou "Mystic Marriage of Sf. #### The Effective Padlock

EVIDENCE accumulates to enforce the conviction that one effective method of asserting and establishing the power of the law in compelling obedience to the rule forbidding the sale of intoxicants is to apply the padlock to premises where such sales are made. So uncompromising and so drastic is this method when resorted to that in the larger cities of the United States there for some time has been noticeable a growing tendency on the part of proprietors and owners of hotels and other business properties to impose upon guests and tenants strict compliance with the federal laws. They are learning that they cannot safely assume the risk of seeing their premises closed by an order of court for several months or a It has been pleaded in behalf of owners and custodians that it is unreasonable to charge them with knowledge of unlawful acts committed in or upon their properties. But it is observed that this plea is made only for the benefit of those whose tenants persist in violation of the prohibition statute. It is an established theory of the law that the owner who permits the continuance of a forbidden nuisance upon his property is equally guilty with the actual offender. The only discrimination made is in the penalties imposed, this being based upon the degree of actual or moral guilt. Long before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment it was the practice to condemn or close premises which harbored certain prescribed nuisances. But little was heard then from those who might have insisted that the forbidden traffic should not be interrupted or interfered with

In the majority of cases, it must be agreed owners and landlords can reasonably be charged with knowledge of the unlawful acts of their tenants. If it is a simple matter for the patrons of speakeasies, many of whom are not familiar with the localities, to discover those places, certainly their character is, or should be, well known to those who profit, directly or indirectly, from the traffic carried on.

No sentimental considerations should be interposed in defense of owners whose innocence of guilty collusion might, in ordinary circumstances, be assumed. The overt acts which constitute grounds for resorting to the use of the padlock are so notorious and so openly committed that the presumption of innocence is not supported by the facts. It must be assumed if no voluntary steps are taken by owners and proprietors to abate the nuisance, that guilty knowledge amounting to collusion actually can be shown. It is in such cases, first of all, that the remedy should be applied. The effect will be to assure greater vigilance on the part of other owners that they may not be imposed upon.

The Railroads' Gift to the Farmers

TALIGNED as the railways have been by legislators and farmers of the western states, the rail carriers have arisen to an emergency brought about by the huge carryover of wheat from last year's bumper crops throughout the world and have agreed immediately to the proposal emanating from the Administration that a reduction be made in freight rates in order that the elevators may be cleared of this stock before another crop is harvested.

Just what effect the rate reduction will have is problematical. Freight rates, despite statements to the contrary, seldom influence the price of a commodity. With reductions in rates on wheat of eleven cents from midwestern points to New York, the hope is advanced that the farmer will be definitely aided in endeavoring to sell his grain in Europe in competition with Canadian and Argentinian grains. But with wheat selling in Chicago, as this is written, at approximately $1.07, a drop of more than ten cents in a few weeks, any further shrinkagecaused either by manipulation or natural causes would leave the farmer just where he was before and the saving in freight rates would be absorbed by lower prices for the wheat. It is violating no secret to state that railroad men would not be wholly unhappy to have this simple lesson in economics brought home to the farmer in order that he might perceive that it is largely market conditions, and not entirely railroad freight charges, which govern the price

The rate on 100 pounds (approximately one and two-thirds bushels) of wheat from a typical North Dakota point to New York is fifty-two cents, so the eleven cents cut would reduce this approximately 20 per cent. Eleven cents a hundred pounds is equivalent to slightly more than six cents a bushel.

Bumper wheat crops last year caused the present condition. With a crop exceeding 900,-000,000 bushels in the United States, and with more than 550,000,000 bushels in Canada and more than 200,000,000 bushels in the Argentine, world markets were glutted. Just what effect the freight rate has on wheat sold in Europe will be shown by the present cut made by American railroads, for the United States farmer now pays a much higher rail rate than his foreign competitors. Canadian wheat from the prairie provinces moves on exceptionally low rates to the head of the lakes for transshipment to Montreal, or westward, from Alberta, to Vancouver for seacoast that it has virtually no rail haul and the costs are insignificant in getting it to tide-

While the United States is consuming more of its own wheat crop each year, there still remains—as a result of overproduction—a considerable amount to be exported. With a view to aiding the farmer, co-operating with the Administration and acting the part of good neighbors, the American railroads have agreed to a substantial cut in their rates, which is, actually, a surrender of part of their revenues to the farmers. It remains to be seen whether the farmer will derive the benefit from this, and if he does, if his attitude toward the railways will become one of greater friendliness.

Surveying All Human Activities

Let observation with extended view Survey mankind from China to Peru.

R. JOHNSON was only about 200 years ahead of the fact when he wrote this couplet about the middle of the eighteenth century. Nowadays everything is "surveyed." Considerable organizations and innumerable individuals derive comfortable incomes from the profession of social surveying without the drudgery imposed upon the civil engineer of first equipping himself with trigonometry and calculus. Indeed, an inquiring mind and a fortunate ability to interest men of wealth in the subject seem to be the only essentials.

On our table lies a rather ponderous book, jacketed like an Upton Sinclair sociological novel. "Middletown," it is called, and it is in substance an inquiry into the habits of life, and to some extent of thought, of a typical midwestern town of some 30,000 people. Into the lives, the earnings, the pastimes, the affections and the beliefs of these people the surveyors pried with insatiable curiosity and produced as a result a book of more than 500 pages closely packed with facts. From them is learned that forty-three people out of every hundred support the other fifty-seven; that eight of these fortythree will be women, and that 1000 out of the 9000 families in the town have the wives at work outside the home. The cost of living is up 117 per cent since 1910; in manual trades it is estimated that wages have risen 191 per cent; and among school-teachers—where precise figures are readily obtainable—from 143 to 159

There is a strong tendency to home owning, rather than tenancy, and "flats" are unpopular. "Education evokes the fervor of religion, a means of salvation," and "high school attendance is as common today as it was rare a generation ago." Leisure is being reshaped by the automobile, radio and movie, and there seems to be a curious tendency to keep leisure occupations within the family—the old-time neighborliness and habit of "calling" having largely disappeared. Two dailies serve the town, and are generally distrusted, while a newsdealer reported his sales of out-of-town papers as averaging 170 copies of the Chicago Tribune, 63 of the Chicago American, 8 of the New York Times, 1 of the New York World and 43 of The Christian

All of which, and several thousand other facts in the volume, will interest students of that rather nebulous science known as sociology. Perhaps a more practical survey is that just completed in New England by a scientific inves-tigator from Tufts College. He has undertaken to discover just what it is that draws people to New England for their summer vacations. The so-called "highbrows" will lament the discovery that historic backgrounds play little part in New England's appeal. While summer visitors have enormously increased in numbers during the last five years, there has been practically no increase in the numbers of those who visited Bunker Hill. Summer visitors are out for rest and recreation, and "natural surroundings" ranks first in the survey of New England's attractions, with "excellent food" second. Cape Codders will rise en masse to repudiate à survey which reports the seashore as third in the list of natural attractions, with the mountains

It's all very interesting, but the multiplicity of inquiries of this sort, ranging from prohibition to public utilities, from crime to the decline of the drama, is getting perplexing. Who will be first to conduct a survey of surveys?

Going Up!

MERICA'S alleged propensity for large things may seem to some to have reached its limit with the announced seventy-fivestory building for Chicago. This tremendous structure, planned to rise 880 feet above the street level, promises to be not alone the tallest building in the world, but indeed the largest. For many years the record for height has been held by the Woolworth Building in New York City, which is 792 feet tall, with fifty-eight stories. The Chrysler Building, now under construction in the same city, will be 808 feet tall and contain sixty-three stories. But the Chrysler Building had been under construction but a few months when the new Bank of Manhattan Building was announced, 840 feet high with sixtythree stories and a tower.

The tremendous heights of these buildings may be appreciated when it is remembered that the Washington Monument is but 556 feet high and the Eiffel Tower but 999 feet. Height alone, however, is no fair measure of the size of a building. The Woolworth Building contains 13,200,000 cubic feet, the Equitable Building in New York City measured 24,000,000 cubic feet, whereas the Merchandise Mart, now being built in Chicago, although only thirty-four stories high, will measure 28,000,000 cubic feet. This new seventy-five-story building for Chicago will, it is planned, measure 63,000,000 cubic feet. is preposterous to believe that structures such as these are built for their advertising value alone. Buildings costing $50,000,000 or more are not used in that way. They would not be erected unless there existed good economic reasons for them, and if skyscrapers are economic, then how high is the limit of economic return on the investment? This is a subject that has been given careful study by numerous building experts. Among architects and structural engineers the eighty-five-story building is most frequently spoken of as the maximum of economic export. Argentine wheat is produced so near the | height. If built higher, the structure, it is believed, would entail too great expenditures for steel, would require columns too large to build, and would necessitate too many elevators. And furthermore, the occupants would not be willing to spend the time necessary to go from the first to the higher stories.

Skyscrapers are much like cities. Unless they offer conveniences not otherwise found, they will not be occupied. They must have easy access and easy egress. The offices and rooms must be reached readily and without loss of time by visitors. In other words, while they tend to bring together under one roof a large number of persons, they must not unduly congest their population nor spread out in such a fashion as to make it difficult to visit the offices. These stupendous structures also must be built with a view to offering comfortable access to the tenants. The seventy-five-story building for Chicago will be built over the tracks of the Illinois Central Railroad. The larger buildings now being constructed in all cities are planned so as to give easy access to subways, street cars, bus lines and the other established means of transportation. Their occupants, very largely, are able to come and go without entering the streets upon which they are erected.

The modern trend in skyscraper building, however, is leaving an impress upon city planners. The development of skyscrapers raises for municipal authorities problems as to their height, size and spacing. Granting, as the fabricators of structural steel contend, that the material is perfectly safe for any economic height or size, still the question arises whether it would not be politic to impose some restrictions.

A School of Geniuses

THE prospective inauguration of a kind of "school of all-talents," floated financially, as the announcement runs, "by American industry," and educationally by Johns Hopkins University, is perhaps a natural outcome of the modern tendency to "rationalize" in all phases of existence. Society, as Neil E. Gordon, the newly appointed professor of chemical education at the university, observes, "has now reached a stage of development where the solution of problems is becoming more and more difficult, and hence if progress is to be made, attention must be given to developing the talented or the more gifted students.'

The grouping together of talented students undoubtedly offers interesting prospects as an educative stimulant. The main condition in any such experiment is that it should be truly educational—that the chief beneficiary should always be the student. If certain heads of industries arrange to finance an educational scheme, designed to turn out young men peculiarly fitted to be leaders in those particular industries, it must be presumed they expect to reap some form of return for their outlay. The question then arises—is the education provided through their liberality to be primarily in the interest of the industries, or of the young men?

A great institution like Johns Hopkins is well able to look to the best interests of the young people in its charge and to see that if either party to the contract were called upon for sacrifices, it would not be the student. But the possibility cannot be overlooked of the movement spreading to a far wider field-particularly if the concrete results of such experiments prove—as they are liable to—encouraging. Then the tendency to exploit the gifted young student in the interests of a college, or of an industry, will demand all the resources of the educationists to counter.

The intensifying of a student's work on a certain subject, thereby making him prematurely a specialist, may yield brilliant results, but it is not necessarily the highest type of education. The business of a specialist, as a British statesman has said, is "to know more and more about less and less." He tends to relinquish the broad interest that a well-rounded education should give. His one subject too often becomes his world, assuming an importance be yond all reason in the scale of human values. His conception of human purpose is liable to become warped from the start.

The tendency of the age is naturally to carry the specialization that has proved so effective in the industrial world in general into the field of education. It is surely the duty of those to whom the great work of education has been intrusted, to decide how much farther specializing can be admitted into education without endangering the welfare of the pupil, and at that point to raise an impregnable barrier through which no rationalizing champion from the industrial world without can break his way. After all, future progress in industry is likely to demand, not the leader who can carry its complexity to still further lengths, but the leader of broad vision who can point the way to better control of such mechanism as already exists.

TT IS necessary to change trains at the frontier because the Spanish railway lines are wider than the French. Why has Spain not adopted the standard gauge?

Various reasons are given, but it would appear that the real reason is military. It is almost ludicrous to suppose that France and Spain could ever come to blows.

There is a conscript system in Spain, and I saw a batch of young men assembling for their transportation to barracks; they bantered each other as all young conscripts do, but there was melancholy in their farewell to civilian life. The disparity between the populations of the two

My compagnon de voyage was an American, the director of a great industry which has installed itself in Spain. The movement began long ago—before the war. German and british firms went to Spain. French firms followed. Now American capital is largely engaged. One of the grievances against Primo de Rivera is that he is endeavoring to nationalize Spain. The Andalusian is less industrious—but this is natural. What puzzles them is piecework. They turn out a large quantity of material, but my office rings every week with complaints. One workman is paid too much, and another workman too little. The bookkeeping is atrocious. The percentage of mistakes is incredible Figures seem to have little meaning. They are unimportant to the clerks, and thus it is not easy to keep the accounts straight. But emphatically I should say that the workman is good, while the executive is not sufficiently acquainted with modern business ways."

We were running through endless whitish plains with whitish hills in the distance and whitish villages over-topped by the square tower of a whitish church. After Valladolid, where in the year 1217 the Queen of Castile gave the crown to her son, where in 1469 Ferdinand and Isabella were married, where Christopher Columbus lived, where Philip II was born, where the mighty Emperor Charles V sojourned, where the first of the Autos Da Fés were celebrated, the dusk fell on the rows of dark green pines with long twisted stems and bushy heads; and the big bowlders on the high plateau grew gray.

The fierce flames of the invisible sun made the scene more barren. There was a chill in the air after the hot day. More and more did one realize that Castile, which is the heart of Spain, is largely an expanse of arid sierras—a wilderness of sun-baked stones. But it is good to make the approach at nightfall, for then the desert is covered romantically by the blue skies of the Spanish dark. It is a deeper blue than one finds anywhere else on the Continent that enwraps these ribs of an ancient world—a rich blue as of a dyed curtain—a blue out of which a few stars shine and on which sometimes there are fastened the golden lights of a village like jewels on the deep blue curtain of night. There is a magnificence in this blue world, but it is a magnificence that is alien and African. It is lonely and silent, and over this desert that Dante might have invented there is spread a veritable

Out of it rises Madrid, almost painfully new and white. It is perhaps the only great city of Europe which does not stand on a river. Despite its modern thoroughfares, its light and bustle, its grandiose buildings, it is as Spanish as the rest of Spain. Yes, it is modern; its lacks the automobiles. One felt that the yoked oxen belonged to Spain, while the automobiles did not. Modernity has not left Spain untouched, but it has been superimposed on Spain without modifying the real Spain.

So we went for miles through country which had the air of being underpopulated. Each little town that we passed had hung out its washing like banners to greet us. From each story hung long lines. It was an everlasting washing day! The better-class houses presented their Out of it rises Madrid, almost painfully new and white.

"TOW I know what it feels like to be an auctioneer," said Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of England, when he endeavored in the garden of 10 Downing Street, his official residence in London, to transfer one of his eve-of-the-general-election speeches to a talking film to tour the provinces. A band striking up in the neighboring Horse Guards parade caused a postponement in the first instance. Later on, after he had taken up his position behind a table over which the microphone was suspended, with one foot resting upon a chair, and had commenced his address, a pigeon began cooing in a tree close by and had to be shooed away by a private secretary. Twice there were interruptions while the film was being changed. Once Mr. Baldwin's notes blew away and he chased them across the lawn, but in the end the film was successfully completed. It is now being shown by a fleet of twelve "talkie" vans which the Conservatives have engaged to give publicity to their propaganda in country districts.

What was two years ago the site of a cowhouse in Marsham Street, Westminster, is now to become the home of the London and National Society for Women's Service. Dame Millicent Fawcett, presiding at the laying of the foundation of the new buildings, described the difficulties through which the movement had passed triumphantly. Enfranchised women can now, she said, turn to new work and fuller service to the community. The foundation stone marked, she hoped and believed, the beginning of a new era in the life of the society. The members would continue to work in the sphere of women's employment for the same ideals which underlay their suffrage cam paigns-equal rights and equal justice and equal pay and equal opportunity for men and women alike. Under the foundation stone was buried one of the first suffrage badges ever made.

The important place which was once held by the horse-drawn omnibus in London and which has now utterly vanished was strikingly illustrated a few weeks ago by an incident at Scotland Yard, England's famous police headquarters. An inventory of it the yard was being taken, says the Manchester Guardian, and several large sacks of numbered badges-more than 60,000 in all-were discovered. They had been made to be issued to horse omnibus drivers. The authorities, realizing how completely the horse has disappeared from this field of transportation, sent some of the badges to museums, and the suggestion is made that many museums in the middle West of the United States and Canada where horse omnibuses were never known would have been delighted to have received one of them. The remaining badges were loaded on a wagon and then taken by boat to the outer area of the Black Deep, which is the picturesque name for a part of the lower Thames estuary, and thrown overboard. Their only escort was a police sergeant who, unconsciously deputizing for millions horse lovers, gravely saluted as the badges sank into

"Certain cookings by a lodging fire—and an adjacent shop" were recalled by Sir James Barrie, the playwright and novelist, at the London Newspaper Press Fund dinner, of which, now in prosperity, he is a generous sup-porter. Looking round the banqueting room, he reminded well-fed journalists of today of times when he and they gazed longingly at things to eat. "That shop," he said, 'used, as if the scene were Verona, to open its casements to the dewy night, so that its Juliets, the chops, might more alluringly address us, 'Oh Romco, Romeo, wherefore hast thou but half-a-crown in all the world, which as thou

LONDON | turnest it in thy fevered hand begins to feel like a twoshilling piece.' It is the little sixpence-halfpenny chop that is speaking. There was also the still more provocative sevenpenny. Have I not joined you at that window, gazing at its contents threateningly? There were even some marked ninepence, haughty things that looked disdain-tully through the likes of us, as who should say, 'Go to, you dogs, I am not for such as you.' There are no such snobs as chops. I don't know who were the swells that bought the ninepennys-perhaps our chairman-some evening when he was giving a party. But the sixpencehalfpennies and the sevenpennies, aha, gentlemen, we have lived, you and I, whatever we may look like tonight."

An outstanding instance of loyalty to an employer was lately celebrated in London when Richard Belsey completed his thirtieth year of continuous service as dresser to Seymour Hicks, the well-known actor. Mr. Belsey is known in theater circles throughout the world by his first rame and has toured nearly every country in the world with his employer. In the thirty years he has only been away from his employer for two weeks. It is said that within an hour of Mr. Hicks' arrival in a new town this taithful adjutant has his dressing room fitted up so that it always looks the same, lamp shades, photographs, and ersonal trinkets being earried from one place to another Mr. Belsey has attended Mr. Hicks at more than 10,000 performances, and as these have averaged three changes of clothes, he has assisted in making 30,000 changes. He has a wife, two sons, and two daughters, who remain at their home in London while Mr. Belsey follows his master on dramatic and other excursions from one end of the world to another.

A clock which indicates what the time is in any part of the world at any moment has recently been installed in the subway of the Piccadilly Underground station. The original intention was to set up a battery of clocks showing the time at principal cities of the Empire and at for-eign capitals; but the new clock combines all this and more in a single instrument. It takes the form of a map of the world, on Mercator's projection, with a narrow and traveling continuously from east to west along the line of the equator, the movement being supplied by electrical contact with the pendulum of an ordinary selfvinding clock. Thus, at any moment, the time at a particular city can be read by projecting a vertical line onto the band. The clock has been designed by the Underground Railway's engineers and provides an additional attraction for the crowds which continue to collect in the Piccadilly station to watch the "see-how-they-run" machines. These recording clocks are for the rapid dissemination of news when some mishap occurs on the trains. The faces of the clocks consist of paper dials covering twenty-four hours and are connected up electrically with a contact lever on the railway track. The passage of an individual train causes a small hammer to on the dial. These marks, if equi-distantly spaced, show that the trains are running to schedule..

A baby camel has been born in the Regent's Park Zoo for the first time in seventeen years and visitors were delighted with their first sight of the little fellow is certain to be a popular addition to the Zoo and will doubtless be allowed much freedom in the grounds, because Daisy, his mother, and Ginger, the father, are exceedingly good-tempered animals who are used for giving rides in the Zoo grounds and consequently are known to thousands of London children. Keepers say the baby camel-is a splendid specimen. His humps, or rather the place where they will be when he grows up and assumes the many duties of a Zoo favorite, are only just visible.
